Architecture UG Rome

UG Architecture

Rome, Italy

Spring Semester

Frederick Biehle
fbiehle@pratt.edu

The Pratt Institute School of Architecture offers an advanced undergraduate program for the 4th year students to study architecture and Italian culture in Rome. The encounter with the city, a place foreign and yet familiar, profound and contradictory, is intended to site a reconsideration of design priorities. The investigation of the remains of antiquity and Rome's urban artifacts can offer a unique lesson; the interaction of physical cause and cultural effect on the built environment and its cumulative presence through time.

Design studio is the backbone of the semester in Copenhagen. You will choose between the interior Architecture studio and Urban Design studio. Students from Architecture, Interior Architecture and Urban Design studios are brought together in elective courses, field studies and study tours. Enrollment will be limited to 12 qualifying students based on review of the applicant's portfolio and academic transcript. If necessary, a portfolio interview will take place by appointment, and a waiting list will be created.

This new study abroad program gives BFA in Writing majors and Social Science creative writing minors in their sophomore or junior year a chance to spend their spring semester in one of Europe's most vibrant artistic and literary cities: Berlin Germany. You can take a full 16 credits of core classes and electives with BFA in Writing faculty while living and learning in Kreuzberg, one of Berlin's most central and exciting neighborhoods. A semester abroad allows students to broaden their cultural, intellectual, and creative horizons, and Berlin is an ideal city for such study and growth. It has a deep, complex, and rich history, and it is, like other major global cities, a dynamic and changing city, one that offers profound opportunities for students to have an in-depth cultural experience.

The GID Program resulted from a desire among top-level design academics in New York, London and Tokyo to come together in a trans-national, innovation-led, educational experience, and to attract some of the most promising creative minds from around the world. Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, New York, Royal College and Imperial College in London, and Keio Media Design in Tokyo are world-renowned academic institutions and leaders in design and innovation, aiming to develop skills in applying creative methods to complex problems in real-world constraints. GID is a partnership between institutions with complementary expertise in art, design, engineering, technology and business, and with the added advantage of locations rich in culture, design and lifestyle. Students gain a unique perspective by living and studying on three different continents, immersed in three different cultures, amidst three of the largest economies in the world.

University of the Arts London offers an extensive range of courses in art, design, fashion, communication, and performing arts. Their graduates go on to work in and shape the creative industries worldwide. UAL was ranked sixth in the world for Art and Design in the 2018 QS World University Rankings®. The university is comprised of six renowned colleges. UAL offers three term options for students interested in studying abroad. There are two ten-week options. The first option occurs between January and March. The second option occurs between April and June. For students who choose to study abroad during the first ten-week option, there is a third, three-week module which occurs after the initial ten-week term. The term may vary, please inquire with studyabroad@pratt.edu
